Learning and Loving It Symposium
Sustaining Community Efforts

Join us to engage in learning, discussion, networking and action planning around methods to support our families and underserved communities through transitions and with the appropriate resources and services.

Learning and Loving It Symposium brings people together, to offer one another encouragement, resources, practical skills, and support.

Who Should Attend:

Community, state and public agencies, health workers, counselors, parent educators, social workers, child health practitioners, educators, nurses, supervisors, community leaders, students, community groups, grass roots and local organizations and anyone interested in the welfare of children, families and underserved communities.

Why Attend:

For educational opportunities, networking, and discussions about the complex issues in supporting communities, families and children.

- To discuss community-based programs and practices
- To learn about the latest research and why our work is vital
- To recognize the impact of stress and social inequality on families and children.
- To learn about funding streams for community programs
- To build skills in communicating with clients, funders and policy makers
- To discuss advocacy methods for engaging community in grassroots efforts to improve the outcomes of children
- To articulate our roles in mediating the effects of health, poverty, information access and education disparities.
- To network with community organizations, practitioners, educators and others to share ideas, information, and experiences.
- To renew friendships and make new ones
- Professional development certificate (7 hours)
